Chapter 8

Plan: A Passionate Mom has a plan for parenting her children from birth to adulthood.

1. Why is it important to work together with your husband when mapping out a parenting plan?
2. While assessing your child's individual situation is necessary for creating a plan, we sometimes suffer from "analysis paralysis," or the feeling that we can't act until we have every possible piece of information. Why is this problematic?
3. When implementing your parenting plan, why is it important to continually confirm how well it's working?
4. Why is first-hand, personal engagement essential in determining whether your child (and your plan) are on course, or if there's a problem which should be addressed?
5. Have you ever had a WOW moment in parenting like the one Susan describes in Chapter 8?
